WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

You've definitely heard of fake news, but how much do you really know about the phenomenon? Experts have admitted they don't have all the info, and they're asking more people to take up the effort. A recent report found that fake news spreads faster on Twitter than true stories, but to researchers, that's just the start. I spoke with one expert at Harvard about why he's joining a "call to arms" to try to get the world to focus on fake news, how it spreads and how to fight it. Read more on page 4 and at metro.us.

MBTA TRAVEL NOT AN OPTION FOR GOV. BAKER

Commuters on the MBTA should not expect to see Gov. Charlie Baker among the straphangers anytime soon. Responding to a frustrated MBTA rider who called in during a radio appearance Thursday afternoon, Baker said he is focused on improving the reliability of the MBTA system but views it as his job to "make sure folks like you can have a reliable and predictable trip," not necessarily to ride it himself. While Baker was on Boston Public Radio on WGBH, a caller asked why Baker has not taken the T. "The governor is not a point-to-point person. It's very rare that I go from one place to the same place more than once, and that makes it extremely hard to think about how to factor that in," Baker said. "And frankly, I really do believe that my job is to make sure that we make the T work for the people who need it to work. Period." STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

NORTHEAST BRACES FOR ANOTHER WINTER STORM

The third nor'easter within the past two weeks is forecasted to bring another round of wind and precipitation to the Northeast, CNN reported. The National Weather Service issued winter storm watches for much of eastern New England, including Boston, for Monday night through Tuesday, the Weather Channel reported. Snow and winds were predicted to intensify off the East Coast and affect the mid-Atlantic region on Monday night before the largest chance of snow arrived on Tuesday, bringing accumulation to parts of eastern New England, the NYC area and Long Island. As residents deal with power outages from last Wednesday's nor'easter, the new weather system could tally as much as 8 inches of snow in eastern New England, the Boston Globe reported, adding that the snowfall could last until about 11 p.m. on Tuesday. TRUMP FOE SEN. WARREN WEIGHS IN ON TARIFFS

Democratic Sen. Elizabeth Warren, who has traded barbs with President Donald Trump, said on Sunday she's "not afraid of tariffs," but stopped short of endorsing his decision to launch steep tariffs on steel and aluminum. In several television interviews, Warren said she saw a role for tariffs as part of trade policy. "I am not afraid of tariffs," she said on NBC's "Meet the Press" program. "We need a comprehensive rethinking of our trade policy." Warren said she was glad Trump agreed to exempt Canada and Mexico from the tariffs, but urged policymakers to think beyond a handful of industries when it comes to overhauling policy. "I think that our trade deals have been negotiated for a very, very long time now to benefit large, multinational corporations, not to benefit the American worker," she said.

US OFFICIALS DEFEND TRUMP-KIM MEETING

U.S. officials on Sunday defended President Donald Trump's decision to meet with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, saying the move was not just for show and not a gift to Pyongyang, as one senator insisted. "President Trump isn't doing this for theater. He's going to solve a problem," Central Intelligence Agency Director Mike Pompeo said on the "Fox News Sunday" program. The United States expects North Korea to halt all nuclear and missile testing in advance of any meeting, according to Pompeo and Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin, who also spoke on a Sunday morning TV program. The goal of the meeting remains denuclearization of the Korean peninsula, something Kim has agreed to discuss, they noted. Pompeo said U.S. military exercises in the region will continue in the lead-up to the talks.

Researchers issue call to arms to combat fake news

A large-scale scientific investigation is needed to look into how false stories spread and how we can fight it, experts from Harvard, MIT and more said Thursday.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

There's a revolution brewing to fight fake news — the only problem is, experts still don't know much about it.

That's why researchers from Harvard, MIT, Yale, Columbia University, Indiana University, Microsoft and more are now calling for a scientific investigation into fake news.

In a paper published Thursday in the journal Science, researchers from across the country are urging others — from computer scientists to historians to political experts to social scientists — to focus on fake news.

"What we did in this report is try and collate, 'Here's what we think we know,' and, 'Here's what we think we don't know,' where more research is needed," said Matthew Baum, one of the paper's authors and a professor at the Harvard Kennedy School.

"Ultimately, the purpose of this is a call to arms, for sure," he added. "But it wasn't just that, it was also [that] … there are huge holes of things we don't know."

What do we know? According to the paper, which looked at other studies on fake news so far, experts estimate there are 60 million automated bots on Facebook and up to 48 million on Twitter.

"Fake news goes back forever," Baum said, noting it isn't just reserved for politics. He cited things like the anti-vaccination movement, how people thought fluoridated water was an instrument of mind control and rumors that mislead the stock market as examples.

Researchers are calling for a large-scale scientific investigation into all things fake news. PIXABAY

What don't we know? Pretty much the whole scope of the problem.

"It's a concern that fake information is spreading around and persuading people and affecting attitudes, but we don't really know how much is out there, how many people are seeing it, how many people are having their opinions or behaviors affected by it," Baum said.

Why try to mobilize others on fake news now? The recent news about a Russian troll farm put a new spotlight on the issue, but that's not all.

"In the aftermath of the 2016 election and the rising cynicism about politics and our political institutions and distrust and polarization, this phenomenon seems to be adding fuel to that fire," Baum said.

Study: Fake news spreads faster than true stories on Twitter

"Fake news" isn't just an insult used in the president's tweets, — it's an epidemic that spreads faster than true stories, at least on Twitter, according to a report.

A study published Thursday by MIT scholars found false information travels faster on Twitter than real news, and it's not entirely the fault of bots.

Though these bots may originate the fake stories, it's real people who are spreading them, according to the study.

Fake news stories are 70 percent more likely to be retweeted than true stories, the researchers found, and it takes true stories six times as long to reach 1,500 people as it does for false stories to reach the same number.

These findings left researchers "somewhere between surprised and stunned," Deb Roy, co-author of the study and an MIT Media Lab professor, said in a statement.

Researchers tracked about 126,000 "cascades," or unbroken retweet chains, of news stories spreading on Twitter between 2006 and 2017. These tweet chains were

People are more likely to retweeet fake news than true stories, according to an MIT study. GETTY IMAGES cumulatively tweeted over 4.5 million times by about 3 million people.

Why are people sharing false info more often? It may be because it's human nature to like new things.

"False news is more novel, and people are more likely to share novel information," said Sinan Aral, a co-author and professor at MIT Sloan, in a statement. He added, "People who share novel information are seen as being in the know." KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Climate change bill expected from Baker in wake of heavy winter storms

Recent storms have put a spotlight on preparation strategies.

As Massachusetts continued to clean up Thursday from its second nor'easter in a week, Gov. Charlie Baker said he plans to file legislation next week addressing climate change.

Baker and Lt. Gov. Karyn Polito surveyed storm damage on the North and South shores last weekend, and Baker said it occurred to him then that "fixing whatever it is that's there may just translate in something similar happening again at some point."

"A lot of these places got hit pretty hard in the Jan. 4 storm as well, and I think we're going to have to come up with a different kind of strategy around resilience," Baker said during his monthly appearance on WGBH Radio.

Storms in January and March combined with high tides to inundate coastal communities with floodwaters, events that have put a spotlight on strategies to prepare for and respond to climate change.

"The time on some of this stuff seems to be now," Baker said.

The Senate in November passed a bill that would require key state agencies to develop a comprehensive adaptation management action plan, the fifth time they've passed a version of that legislation.

"Public safety officials tell us that the flooding is the worst that they have seen," said Sen. Mark Pacheco, the bill's sponsor. "If there is ever a time to get climate readiness and climate adaptation into statute, it is now."

The Massachusetts Climate Change Adaptation Coalition has called on House lawmakers to take up the bill, and House Majority Leader Ronald Mariano, who leads a special House working group created to respond to Trump-era federal policy, said Tuesday his group is "in discussions now with putting that bill on the agenda and getting it moving."

On the radio Thursday, Baker did not stake out a position on the Senate bill when co-host Jim Braude mentioned it. He said the nature of the ocean and the state's coastline presents a challenge when pursuing policies in this area.

"The ocean is a changing entity, and what I would really like us to do is to do a serious, one-end-of-the-coast-to-the-other study on both the opportunities and the liabilities and the threats that are sort of all the way up and down the coastline, and then work with the local communities and the Legislature, and probably with the feds, since a lot of this stuff involves Army Corps of Engineers stuff," Baker said.

He added, "It's not going to be the same answer in every part of the coast."

Baker in 2016 signed an executive order directing his administration to develop and implement a statewide adaptation plan and come up with regulations addressing emissions reductions across sectors, including the transportation industry.

Baker said the state has also been working with municipalities on "vulnerability planning."

"We're probably going to need to do more, more quickly, with respect to this issue, and I anticipate we'll probably file some legislation on it pretty shortly to make sure we get more aggressive about this," he said.

TV shows based on comics you can watch right now

From troubled teens to the terrifying undead, and loads in between. RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS

There's no denying it: comic book TV shows — aka television series based on comics — are still very much having a moment. And well, if it ain't broke, don't fix it.

"The End of the Fing World" Netflix

Based on a graphic novel of the same name by Charles Forsman, "The End of the Fing World" follows teens James and Alyssa on a violent coming-of-age road trip. Its television version, released on Netflix earlier this year, was met with critical acclaim and for good reason: It's a magnetic, utterly watchable eight episodes.

"Happy!" Syfy

This crime dramedy is based on the four-issue comic book series of the same name created by writer Grant Morrison alongside artist Darick Robertson. It follows Nick Sax, an alcoholic ex-cop turned hitman with a blue, cartoon imaginary friend named — yep! — Happy.

"iZombie" CW

This series is loosely based on a comic book of the same name published by DC Comics under their Vertigo imprint, and created by Chris Roberson and Michael Allred. The TV version follows Liv Moore, a recently turned zombie, who uses her abilities to help solve crimes.

"Marvel's Jessica Jones" Netflix

Our favorite Netflix crimefighter lives in the same universe as Luke Cage, Daredevil and, ugh, Iron Fist. Based on the Marvel character, the small-screen Jessica Jones is a hard-drinking P.I. with superstrength to spare.

"Legends of Tomorrow" CW

This one is based off of characters from DC Comics, too, and features a ragtag group of superheroes — from Hawkman to Heat Wave — banding together to save time itself.

"Marvel's Iron Fist" Netflix

Danny Rand, the Iron Fist, is a martial arts expert with the ability to call upon the power of the Iron Fist. He's based on a Marvel character of the same name, too.

"Gotham" Fox

This prequel of sorts features characters based on DC's Batman franchise and focuses on James Gordon's early days with the Gotham City Police Department before including the origin stories of tons of Batman villains, from Penguin to Ra's al Ghul.

"Fear the Walking Dead" AMC

The postapocalyptic horror drama, created by Robert Kirkman and Dave Erickson, serves as both a companion series and prequel to "The Walking Dead" — just in case you found all that zombie gore strangely familiar.

‘Nailed It’ is the cooking show for those of us who suck

Netflix nails it with a bake-off for basics.

You might laugh when it happens to someone else, but we all know the feeling. You gave it your all, but that artsy cake you were making just didn’t turn out like you wanted.

Yep, it’s a Pinterest fail. And now you can watch amateur bakers attempt the same thing head-to-head with professional bakers on Netflix’s “Nailed It,” a baking show for lovers of the meme by the same name.

Call it finding solace knowing you’re not alone or, probably more accurately, schadenfreude, but there’s something about this show that’s absolutely delicious. The show dropped Friday and we’ve been laughing at hapless chefs — that are just like us — all weekend long. Get on it, fellow B-level baker.

Hosted by comedian Nicole Byer and chocolatier Jacques Torres, this show pits “home bakers with a terrible track record” against professionals, and makes them “take a crack at re-creating edible masterpieces for a $10,000 prize,” according to Netflix.

So, yeah, this is you versus the inventor of the cronut, given a microwave and two hours to create the perfect unicorn cake. What could go wrong?!

It’s sort of like Food Network’s “Worst Cooks in America” meets “The Great British Bake Off,” but with tons more laughs.

Each episode features a guest judge given the honor (?) of giving each successful or unsuccessful (hint: always unsuccessful) attempt to nail a recreation of an ultimately unachievable baked good a taste test.

Spoiler alert? It doesn’t often go well. And we love it.

The entire first season (six 30-minute eps) of “Nailed It” is available now on Netflix.

Where Andrew Zimmern likes to eat in Boston's North End

The "Bizarre Foods" host opens up about his new show, and where he likes to eat when he's in the Hub.

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

Whenever Andrew Zimmern is in Boston, he always makes time for a quick picnic in the North End.

The "Bizarre Foods" host was back in town over the summer to film episodes for "The Zimmern List," which premieres March 13 on the Travel Channel. The series is "a very personal show" for Zimmern, giving viewers a peek at the places he loves to visit across the country.

GETTY IMAGES

When he wasn't busy stopping by Fenway Park and catching up with his local culinary pals like Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette, Zimmern found room in his schedule to swing by his favorite Italian deli during his latest trip to the Hub. The food star, who used to live in Boston, tells Metro that he has a ritual of visiting the North End shop whenever he travels to the city.

"Every time I'm in Boston — and I mean every time, without fail — I go to Salumeria Italiana in the North End," Zimmern says. "I buy a third of a pound of this, a quarter of a pound of that, and I make a picnic for myself."

Whether he's by himself or with friends and family, Zimmern always takes his cache of treats to the same spot for a nice picnic.

"I head down the street and away from the big crowds and I sit in that little park across from Paul Revere's house," he says. "People forget there are two picnic tables there, and I have a little picnic.

"It's the best way to taste, because I can get meat and cheese at Salumeria Italiana, I can get bread from my favorite bakery, I can get my cannoli from Maria's," Zimmern adds. "I've got the picnic of my dreams. I get to wander the North End shopping and then I don't have to carry so much around because I'm eating it."

In addition to his love for the North End, Zimmern has a special place in his heart for the city as a whole and the great food that it has to offer.

"Boston is one of my favorite cities," Zimmern says. "I just adore everything about it, and the food scene is really, really great."

For many women, relocating for work outside of the U.S. means trading a higher income for improved overall happiness. A recent study by InterNations, the world's largest network for people who live and work abroad, found that 51 percent of all women working abroad were happy with their career opportunities and 13 percent "very happy" with their opportunities.

On the flipside, they found 33 percent of women working abroad felt they were giving up larger salaries in the U.S. in exchange for their new surroundings.

Trade-offs

Given that living conditions might be ... erm ... different in other parts of the world, relocating has its gives and takes. And the opportunity isn't likely to be handed to you — InterNations found only 7 percent of women said they were sent abroad by an employer, while the number of men was double that. As a result of not being forced to relocate, 47 percent of women surveyed in the study said that they were able to find their own work once they'd set up shop abroad.

So if you think you can get by on a little less (and you can), you don't mind one-ply toilet paper (you'll get used to it) and can tolerate FaceTime rather than face-to-face family events (Hallelujah!) it seems you'll have a better life abroad. But where to, Google Flights?

Best spots to land (a job)

The study says that the happiest, most successful ladies end up relocating to Mexico, Myanmar, Cambodia, Bahrain and New Zealand, in terms of their careers and fulfillment. They seem to have the most to offer, and receive the most positive feedback.

Mexico's close (beaches!), Myanmar's different (your nana will remember it as "Burma"), Cambodia's home to Angkor Wat (what?!), Bahrain will up your scarf game and New Zealand's arguably the most beautiful country on the planet. So there's all of that to consider.

So ...

If your company gives you the option of relocating for work, take it into serious consideration. If you don't work for such a company or are looking for a job, cast your eyes to jobs posted online. Sure, you'll need sponsorship for a work visa (this isn't the only country that frowns on immigrants working illegally), but there are plenty of postings that will take you.

But that thing called "money"

If you're willing to trade off on some of that "happiness" quotient and bank big on dollars, consider teaching English abroad. You already speak it, you don't need extensive experience, and if posted in a less-than-desirable location you can pay off those mounting credit card bills in a couple years. "I Have Iraq In My Shoe" is a great book by the American Gretchen Berg, who did exactly that to conquer bills from Bloomingdale's, and she had some remarkable travel experiences to show for it.

Get a job without even having a résumé

All it takes is an online search and a couple lattes.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

With so many job board sites available, it's hard to stand out to employers from the thousands of résumés that come pouring in every day. They need to get a good sense of who you are, and not the list of accomplishments bulleted on your CV. Here are some of the best ways to apply for a job without a résumé.

A coffee can get you in the door. ISTOCK

Go after what you want

According to wildly successful entrepreneur Scott Petinga, being direct and putting your neck on the line will get you the attention of an employer in a more meaningful way than blindly sending your résumé. If there's a position online that looks like it could be your dream job, you should be DMing that employer through LinkedIn — and even Facebook and Twitter — to see set up a chat.

"There've been people who have reached out to me when I didn't think we had an open position," says Petinga. "I've hired people purely because they sat across the table from me, had a cup of coffee and knocked my socks off."

And once you have set up this meeting, you should …

Be as genuine as possible

Employers just want to see that you're trustworthy, and, well, a person cool enough that they'd want to work with all day. By meeting for coffee to talk about the position and other things that are meaningful in your life, you can apply to a job without a résumé and leave a connection that could get your foot in the door.

"You can almost think of a résumé now as a social media post," says Petinga. "It's an idealized version of yourself. Meaning: it's pure bulls—t. I like people who are brutally honest. I love when I ask people 'what is your greatest accomplishment to date?' A lot of times I don't want to hear about work. Authenticity is huge in those situations. Don't tell me what you think I want to hear. Be true to yourself."

Ultimately, Petinga views hiring someone like welcoming a new friend into his inner circle. So to stand out, find the most creative way to apply for a job without a résumé.

"We rarely ever post [openings]," explains Patinga of his own companies. "I don't want every individual who thinks they are capable to send me a résumé when I'm not going to read them. It's just a waste of everybody's time. We are always looking for people. It's more of a needle in the haystack situation, really. You can never have too much talent. But I'm one of those believers that thinks I'm not the smartest person in the room and I have to surround myself with those people."

Bottom line?

Become an ethical stalker of companies you want to work for, and the powers-that-be at those companies. It could be the bakery across the street or a job at a big corporate outfit — DM, tweet or just show up at the office with a uniquely-you invite for a cup of joe. No one is reading the résumé you either don't have or haven't polished up that's been sent into the ether. Personal connection is key.

March Madness 2018: Breaking down all four regions in this year's bracket

Seeking some help filling out that bracket? We've got you covered.

EVAN MACY
evan.macy@metro.us

For college hoops fans, it doesn't get better than this. For casual sports fans who have yet to watch a single bucket scored in college hoops, there's finally a reason to watch.

Here's a look at what you need to know about each of the four regions before things tip off later this week:

East Region

Best first-round matchup: Want to see an offensive explosion? Tune in Friday to watch No. 8 Virginia Tech play No. 9 Alabama.
Best upset pick: Villanova has had a lot of trouble with No. 10 Butler, which will take its Big East toughness to its battle against No. 7 Arkansas. Butler could very well take down Arkansas.
Best Final 4 pick: Villanova

South Region

Best first-round matchup: Not the Kentucky of old, this year's squad lands a No. 5 seed and will have its hands full with the red-hot 12th seeded Davidson, fresh off their upset win in the A-10 tournament besting Rhode Island. This could be a perfect situation for a 12-over-5 upset.
Best upset pick: The Ramblers from Loyola-Chicago will have a tough test against No. 6 Miami as an 11-seed, but as any avid tournament watcher knows well, there is always an 11 that advances.
Best Final 4 pick: Arizona

Midwest Region

Best first-round matchup: Kansas - UPenn has the potential to be one of the better 1-vs-16 matchups we've ever had.
Best upset pick: We like the College of Charleston, ranked as the 13-seed to beat No. 4 Auburn in the SEC — a conference lacking in great basketball lately.
Best Final 4 pick: Duke

West Region

Best first-round matchup: The Cougars from Houston are the 6-seed out west and will have a tough time against 11th seeded San Diego State.
Best upset pick: Providence is the 10 seed but has the credentials of a true contender. They have defeated the No. 2 overall seed Villanova, and took them to overtime in the Big East championship game nearly upsetting them for a second time.
Best Final 4 pick: North Carolina

Each of the last few times Villanova has won the Big East Tournament they've not made it past the Sweet 16. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Realistic names for the Patriots in NFL free agency

Last year was something of an outlier for the Patriots when it came to free agency and the start of the new NFL year as the Pats threw gobs of money at free agent cornerback Stephon Gilmore and traded for big-name wide receiver Brandin Cooks. This March, don't expect quite as many fireworks.

Cornerbacks Aqib Talib and Richard Sherman already have new homes (the Rams and the 49ers, respectively) — so it looks like the Patriots will be in the market for less heralded players on the open market. Here is a look at several players that are likely on Bill Belichick's revised wish list.

Shane Vereen came up huge in his last game as a Patriot as he had 11 catches in Super Bowl XLIX. GETTY IMAGES

Shane Vereen, RB (Giants)
Bringing back Vereen on short money instead of re-signing Dion Lewis to a hefty deal makes a ton of sense for the Patriots. Vereen is still just 29-years-old and remains one of the top pass-catching backs in the NFL. He had 44 catches for 253 yards during the Giants' dreadful season last year, and had three straight 400-plus yard receiving seasons from 2013-15 with the Pats and Giants.

Tyler Eifert, TE (Bengals)
Teams may be hesitant to sign Eifert in free agency given his injury history. If that's the case, then the Patriots would gladly scoop him up with the low-ball deal. The 27-year-old Eifert had 13 touchdowns during his last healthy season and would complement Rob Gronkowski beautifully. With Martellus Bennett having been released and Dwayne Allen likely getting the boot soon — the Pats will be in the market for a second tight end.

Trumaine Johnson, CB (Rams)
Adding Johnson would instantly give the Patriots one of – if not the best cornerback duo in the league with Gilmore already on board. The problem here is the amount of money Johnson will demand, which is expected to be nearly $15 million per year. Likely too pricey for the Pats.

Preston Brown, LB (Bills)
Brown is routinely among the NFL leaders in tackles (he led the league in 2017) and is very strong in pass coverage. Given that the Pats' pass coverage from the linebacker position was among the worst in the league this past season, Brown should absolutely garner interest from Belichick. MATT BURKE

Aries Take hold of what's important to you, even if someone plays an emotional mind game with you. Letting someone limit what you can do will set you back.

Taurus Get involved in a project or make the effort to learn something new. The encounter you have with someone you meet will change your life. Participate and reciprocate.

Gemini Don't be too trusting. You have plenty to offer, and your enthusiasm will be appreciated. Someone is likely to twist your words or take credit for your ideas.

Cancer Look for the positive in every situation. Use your intuition to help you understand why you are faced with opposition so you can find a way to compromise.

Leo Think about the way you present yourself or the way you deal with co-workers, friends and family. Be open and receptive to change.

Virgo Participate in something that's within your budget to bring you closer to the people you care about most. Spend time with kids, parents or a friend in need.

Libra Trouble will brew at home or with friends or co-workers today. Keep the peace, even if it means spending time on your own. A little pampering will do you good.

Scorpio If you make a couple of changes to your office space or living arrangements, it will make a world of difference to your daily output. Stop procrastinating and get started.

Sagittarius Refuse to let someone restrict your freedom. Demanding people need to be put in their place. Take care of your responsibilities and suggest others do the same.

Capricorn An emotional incident will change everything. Be careful how you deal with friends, peers and relatives. A wrong word or move will be difficult to reverse.

Aquarius Look at what you've accomplished in the past and use old successes to build new ones. Trust in your instincts and let your experience lead to victory.

Pisces Do what you can to pitch in and help, even if someone who likes to command your attention complains. It will feel good to help a cause you care about. EUGENIA LAST
